Remembering our Loved Ones

In our Catholic tradition of remembering the dead we are living out our faith in the fact that we belong to a community that goes way beyond our family and our parish. We belong to a community that reaches beyond the grave and which reminds us that: Lover never ends (1Cor 13:8).

We belong to the Communion of Saints, the Mystical Body of Christ. This is a community that invites us to know that in times of great sadness we are never alone, that we are linked to one another through an unbreakable bond of love. The month of November begins with the two days of remembering which give us a chance to recall this – All Saints Day and All Souls Day. These are days of great hope and love because they invite us to think about how blessed we have been in the family members and friends who have gone before us.

They have given us so much and taught us so much and these are treasures that are not lost with the passage of time. These days also allow us to feel the pain of our loss, something we must do if we are to grieve properly. In the Gospel Jesus asks us to not be afraid to bring our burdens to him. He knows our pain and wants us to find our peace in him. These days also encourage us not only to pray for our departed friends but also to pray to them, knowing that through our faith we are linked by a love that never ends. They also remind us of how we in the parish community might support and encourage one another at times of suffering and loss. We are not only a community of worship and prayer; we are also a community of care and compassion.
